This is something that has never been done by any gland. Much as I boom and even love it, there is no response from this "mother them clrusch" to us or any who as enteide ber pale My readers can well understand therefore, from how large a proportion of the community this cuts us off, except as we can reach isolated individuals who take the responsibility and trouble of overstepping bounds and coming to hear. The number of these in some places is considerable, but with the most, It is quite sufficient that "my rector," "my vicar," "my curate" discountenances these informal gatheringe. Erith church, prettily restored, of late, at large espense, is one of the ancient landmarks of this wondrous country of relics. The Barons are said to have assembled in it for conference after Runnymede and Magna Charta, wrested from the tyrant King John.

We ran up to London to-day for our usual services with the dear "Working Womon." We have increasing joy in bringing the full gospel to these "toilers for a pittance." They are about as appreciative listenera as we ever have-always gentle and grateful. Praise the LDRD for sending us thus, to His own dear "poor." The LORD gave me a new sernion on "Samaon's Riddle," while speaking in Jewin at, and another on "Christ our Wielom," at Alderegate to day, both of which I thankfully add to my "stock in trade." We had; aharp work making connections, but by nunching our samiwiches and fruit on the train, we got back to Erith in time for the past 11. His linguing them are most r. M. Bible Reading. OBITUARY

It is known to must of the readers of the JOURNAL that care to know that Mr. Wm. M. Fair died at his reeldence on Saturday the 221 of this month, but doubtless a word about his life and character will be interesting to his many acquaintances and friends. I knew him for sixteen years, married into his family thirteen years ago and preached to him as his pastor ten years. I can sav iruly he was a good and a godly man. He was a thoroughly honest man. I do not believe there is a man living or dead that he intentionally cheated As I stood by a little while after his death, while his neighbors were preparing him for burial, nne said: "If every man was such a man as Mr. Fair was, there would be no need of courts or laws." He was always willing to do right without the compulsion

He never had a taw-auit. Another said: "He was the friend of every man who wanted to do right." That is true. He did not wish to have anything to do with the man who was unwilling to do right, but every man, rich or poor, that he knew to be honest, he befriendel. So far as I was able to discover he did not owe a dollar at his death. He was a kind and peaceable neighbor. He was on good terms with them all. He worked out in his life the acriptural injunction, "As far as listh in you, live peace" ably with all men."

He was devoted to his family. He lived for them. He exercised discreason, but never knew his children to need what he could consistently give, without giving it He said to them a day or two be fore hi death: "I have saved something, but it is not that I wanted to be rich. I hope It will do you all some good."

But above all, he was an humble christian. He made no display as such, for he was naturally timid and shrank from the public. With a tender and trustful heart be rerved his God in a quiet way. He sometimes, while I was his pastor, after hearing me preach on missions, or the duty of giving, would give me privately $5 or $10, telling me to use it as I deemed best for the cause of Christ.

He bad a tender and forgiving heart. He found it hard to forgive an Irjury, but he could and did forgive it. I heard him eay once to a disaffected member: "Nothing la nobler than to forgive an injury."

He was through life cheerful and hopefoliand he hoped to recover from his last illness, but said to me and others time and again: 'I am perfectly resigned. I want the Lord's will done."

He was a good man, and after doing faithfully through life what God had told him to do, he went up at His call to the higher and nubler service of heaven.
